

The target was described as a compound located on a level site in a hot, humid, foreign land. The indigenes are dark-skinned and dark-haired.

A multistoried wooden building is on the site. Within it are offices, living quarters and a clinic or laboratory.

Nearby is a cluster of very low, interconnected, cell-like older structures or long, narrow, interlocking, covered trenchworks with dirt floors, low ceilings and hewn rock walls. This area was likened to a dungeon; foul-smelling, dusty, some filtered light, tick marks and graffiti on the walls.

These structures had been used to imprison a group of people possessing mutually common traits (NFI). This group has since been relocated to another (hidden) location.
